THE JAPANESE IS A NEW YORK OMNIBUS An amusing anecdote of the Japanese in New York is thus related:

CINCINNATI, TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 3, 1860.

Extraordinary Production—The Guissa Snake-Nut.

Among the great variety of trees, nuts and fruits that abound in the productive region of British Guisna, there is a nut, the seed of a tree, which is more remarkable and curious than all the others. This wonderful nut slightly resembles a bitter walnut in external appearance, yet it often attains to the size of an English walnut. It grows with a smooth husk or rind covering a thin shell. When dried, the outside of the shell is of a dark brown color, while the inside is whitish, with a beautiful pearly surface. The kernel of the nut grows in the form of a snake, as it lies coiled upon the ground. One end is large, resembling the head of the snake, and from this it gradually tapers, in coils, to the other extremity. The entire length of the kernel, if uncoiled, would be from six to eight inches, according to the size of the nut. When fresh from the tree, the kernel may be thus uncoiled, and if suspended in a bottle of spirile, it appears like a miniature snake.

While the nut is green, the kernel is white, and fills the shell, but when it ripens, and has been kept for a long time, the kernel is white, and fills the shell, but when it ripens, and has been kept for a long time, the kernel becomes sunken, hard, and of a dark, woody appearance, more nearly resembling a dried snake than any thing else with which we can compare it. The serpentine form of the embroy may be distinctly observed, on first opening the shell, although it is entirely covered by a thin, brownish, silky skin. This skin may be easily removed, and then the perfect form of the snake appears, with coils more distinctly separate than in the real snake. The spaces within the coils of a green nut are filled with a downy, or silky substance, which hardens when drying, yet it is easily removed. When vegetating, its root-germ springs from the small end of the embroy. Under a microscope, the appearance of the kernel is very much like that of a piece of coarse-grained maple-sugar.

Some days since we mentioned the fact that the head of the great Protector was kept by a certain family in England, and we now give some very interesting particulars of the distinguished caput, from a London correspondent of the New York Evening Post, who

Being desirous of seeing the century-guarded relic, I obtained a note stating my object, and rode out to the residence of the Hon. Mr. Wilkinson, at Bromley, Kent, near the metropolis. Mr. Wilkinson, a few years since, was Member of Parliament from Lambeth, but having, under a sense of duty, voted for the opening of the Crystal Palace on Sabbaths, he became so unpopular with his constituency that he was not sustained, and since then he has been in private life. Being possessed of ample means and refined taste, he has taken great pains in ornamenting his residence, and it will favorably compare with he has taken great pains in ornamenting his residence, and it will favorably compare with the charming homes that one meets every where among the seats of the gentry throughout England. The situation is delightful, and the surrounding landscape is one of almost faultless loveliness. The velvet-tike lawn is gay with beds of the rarest and sweetest flowers, huge old cake throw their shadows across the wide park, and deer and beautiful English cattle browse deep in the shade of the grand old trees.

Being shown into the drawing-room, a lady in the prime of life, and of elegant person, soon made her appearance. It was the accomplished daughter of Mr. W—, in whose care the relic has long been confided. With the manners of the true gentlewoman she readily granted my request as soon as it was made known, the more especially as the stranger was an American. stranger was an American.

stranger was an American.

Soon a large wooden box was brought into the apartment and opened. Enclosed in it was a much smaller one of mahogany, with heavy brass hinges. Lifting it carefully out, two or three coverings of cloth and slik were successively removed from the object within it, and then was displayed the veritable head of Oliver Cromwell Oliver Cromwell.

Deep and varied were my emotions when that renowned head was first disclosed to my view. I could scarcely realize that I was in-deed gazing on the brain that had once been deed gazing on the brain that had once been so mighty in intellect, so stupendous in power. As vision after vision of the stern. Puritan's eventful life rose before me, I stood transfixed in a whirl of thought. For a moment—a moment only—I dared to grasp the precious relic in my hand, then laying it reverently down, I turned away from the head of Cromwell.

From being embalmed the fisch is in a dry.

A few of these nuts were recently brought to New York by Mr. Bernhard Rics, who was a resident of Demerara for twenty years, and for several years the Venezuelan Consul in British Guianna. To him are we indebted for the possession of a specimen of this great curiosity, and for most of the facts pertaining to it. of Cromwell.

From being embalmed the fiesh is in a dry, shrivelled state, but the features are remarkably distinct, and the dark hair is as natural as life. The huge wart on the right eyebrow is plainly visible, and the end of the iron pike is all rusted with exposure to the elements, only a couple of inches remaining above the skull. Altogether this interesting memorial of a by-gone century is in an exmemorial of a by-gone century is in an ex-cellent state of preservation, and so life-like are the features that there is little in them that is hideous or repulsive.

yet fruitless, researches in the most complete works on natural history and botany for some account of this mysterious nut, we have come to the conclusion that its history has not been recorded. recorded.

The natives regard this nut as a warning of danger, because where it grows there is found a venomous snake, the bite of which is certain death. While the voyagers into the interior are selecting a place for their night's encampment, should they chance to discover any of these snake-nuts upon the ground, they quickly abandon the site, return to their boat, and proceed to select another place where the nuts are not found. The coexist-eace of this nut and the snake in the same locality is a subject which will be left for the imagination of our readers, as we have not EXTRAORDINARY BOVINE PHENOMENON-Across the river, in the little village of Glen-dale, New Jersey, says the Philadelphia North American, resides a Mrs. Nancy J. Coffin. Mrs. Coffin has a heifer not yet turned three years of age, that has already given maternity to no less than five calves. The first calf was born before the dam was two years old. On Friday, this remarkable heifer gave birth to four calves, all at one time. Their sire was a gentleman cow belonging to Mr. Shinn, of Haddonfield, New Jersey. The three calves follow their mother in a highly three calves follow their mother in a highly interesting manner. The mother appears to have made special dictary arrangements with her trio of juveniles, and allows but one at a time to tug at her lacteal fountain. Valuable Inventions for Railways—
One of the men employed in the shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Harrisburg, has completed a model of what may be regarded as a valuable invention. In the building of trucks, it becomes necessary to turn a track three times before it is completed. This has been done heretofore by block and tackle, and the use of a derrick, which would sometimes slip in spite of every precaution. By such a mishap, a man was killed in the Altoona shop, some four months ago. The invention is a machine to obviate the use of the derrick. The truck is built upon treatles, and can be elevated by screws.
This will enable a few men to turn the truck whenever necessary, and without any danger EXTRAORDINARY ESCAPE FROM AN ENGLISH PAISON.—The Inverness Advertiser records the escape from Nain jail of a notorious character, sentenced to ten years penal servitude for sheep-stealing. He commenced operations by turning up a flagstone in his cell; then dug eight feet to the foundation of his prison, under which he made a tunnel; then holing upward for the same distance on the outside of the foundation, he at length effected a breach. The hole resembles a rabbit's burrow, nearly two cart-loads of sand and debris being deposited on the floor of his cell. His tools consisted of a small pewter saucer, the leg of his cell-table, and his trousers, which were converted into a bag to convey the loosened material out of the way. It would puzzle the head of many a wiser man to pass through a hole resupblying the letter U, in some parts not a foot square. By the aid of the outside bars of the prison windows he got upon the roof, and, at last, landed in safety in an adjoining garden. whenever necessary, and without any danger whatever. Another invention, important for the saving of life, is a self-adjusting carcoupling designed to avoid the necessity of going between the cars to couple them, when they are run together, the dangerous nature of which is well known.

ATTRACTIVENESS OF WIDOWS .- Here is an opinion from which we entirely dissent, but which we publish for the benefit of those who believe its truth:

believe its truth:

Young widows are always blithe. They ever meet with a smile and flattering words. Can any one tell why? Young widows pay yery scrupulous attention to dress. None know so well what colors, black or otherwise, are best suited to their complexion, nor what freaks of millinery serve to highten the beauty of their form. Their knowledge of this subject they will put in practice. Does any one know why? Young widows, if at first pleasant, gay and agreeable, through affectedness, become really so through habit. It is said she who marries a second time is a better wife to her second than to her first husband. Who can give a reason if we have not given it? Young widows are the most charming part of creation; the envy of one sex and the beloved of the other, and why? PRILIOUS POSITION OF AN EMIGRANT SHIP.
The ship Jane Henderson, Captain H. Galt, while on her voyage from Liverpool to Baltimore, went ashore a day or two since, about twanty-five miles south of Cape Henry. Capt. Galt found it necessary to cut away all the masts, notwithstanding which the ship broke in two. The crew, together with the passengers, took refuge in the highest parts of the vessel, but were in danger of being lost. Wrecking vessels have gone to rander them assistance.

A locomotive belonging to the Memphis, Clarksyille and Louisville Road, run into the rear of the passenger train, recently, about twelve miles from Nashville. The engineer in charge was grossly incompatent, and his machine becoming unmanageable on the down grade, he deserted it, and the accident resulted. One of the brakesmen on the train was badly hurt, but none of the passengers were injured. Among the latter was Hon. John Bell, who, though thrown from his seat, was but slightly hurt. The engine was a complete wreck, and the train considerably injured.

A Huos Black Shark Capruses.—In draining a large pond near St. Louis, a few days ago, the workmen thought they had come across the sea sarpent, so loftily did something rear is head and furiously lash its tail. He was something in that line, sure enough—a black snake ten feet two inches long. He was, also, owing to the abundance of fish he had fattened ou, not less that twenty-three inches in altermante circumference. 19000

The London Chronicle of June 15 is somewhat distressed lest the young Prince of Wales should not visit the United States, and makes the following editorial remarks on the subject:

What will the Americans say if the illustrious young Englishman should come next door, and not do so much as make a call? What return would this be for the open heartiness with which Americans, while in no degree compromising their independence, manifest their satisfaction at any show of royal attention? What sort of mistrust would it imply in a noble race like the Americans—our own blood? As a practical question, what is there to apprehend? Possibly some difficulty in hedging round the Royal Prince with the requisite amount of etiquette! By daybreak this morning thousands of people had congregated on the shores and every adjacent place where a view could be had. of "a character" as follows:

I must tell you of a wonder of a man I called to see in the mountains of Virginia. He went in childhood to these wilds, when there were but five men to be found in a wide region to help raise a log cabin. He told me some wondrous stories of bear hunts and bear fights, of deeds of daring and feats of strength almost incredible. He is now eighty-four years of age, hus been six feet three inches tall, of fine proportions, magnificent chest, and great good sense, although he never read a word in his life. He began with his rifie, lived on fish, wild turkeys, deer and bear, sold their skins, made a little money, bought land, and has accumulated quite a little fortune. This he has conveyed, before his death, to his children, they supporting him while he lives. But, strangest of all, though often urged to do both, he never borrowed $1, nor ever had his name on the books of a merchant or mechanic, persistently refusing to buy on credit. of "a character" as follows: ently refusing to buy on credit.

OUTRAGEOUS INDIFFERENCE—A LIFE LOST BY NEOLECT.—A day or two ago, says a New York paper, as the steamboat Satellite was proceeding down the bay, with a Sunday-school excursion on board. Homer Leggett, a boy of eight years, fell overboard. Mr. George White, a passenger, instantly jumped after him, caught and succeeded in sustaining the child above water for over a half hour, when, being thoroughly exhausted, he had to let go his hold on the boy, who was drowned. The steamer, meanwhile, made no attempt to launch a boat, nor even to check her headway, until, when over two miles from the drowning child, they lowered a yawl, which was barely in time to save Mr. White.

Useful Practical Hires.—It is clearly understood that skilled workmen are not requisite to paint common word work. Thin-coat the knots with patent knotting, at Is 6d, per pint. Stop up the nail-holes and all the shakes before putting on second coat with putty, at 8s, per cwt., and rub down with pumice stone, at 3d, per pound. Priming color or lead color, at 6s, per gallon, will cover fifty-five yards, stone color, at 7s, 6d, or yellow paint, at 5s., forty-four yards, black paint, at 5s., 90 yards; blue color, at 8s, 6d, or green paint, at 6s, fifty-five yards, bright emerald green, at 12s., twenty-five yards bronze green, at 6s., sixty yards.—

A PROJECTED SWINDLE ON AMERICANS.—A correspondent of the Levant (Greek) Herald, writing from Beyrout, warms Americans against a deputation, consisting of two young men, natives of Syria, about to visit America, whose intention it is to selicit alma throughout the States for a proposed (imaginary) hospital, which a Marount Rishop, they are to declare, wants to build on Mount Lebanon. The writer characterizes the whole scheme as a downright swindle—as an attempt to raise money for private use by false pretenses.

"Livery" Boys.—A thing takes its character from the way in which we view it. Thus, when Dr. Spooner dined with a friend who had three furbulent sons, and they got into a row at the table resulting in throwing the sonp in each other's faces, the father turned to the doctor with the simple remark, "Boys will be lively, sir."

THE REASON NOVELS ALWAYS ESD WITH MARSHAGE.—There is a good reason why novels always end with the marriage of the hero and heroine; our interest is always more excited by the struggles than by the results of victory. So long as the lovers are unhappy, or apart, and are eager to vanquish obstacles, our sympathy is active; but no sooner are they happy, than we begin to look elsewhere for other strugglers on whom to bestow our interest. It is the same with biography. We follow the hero through the early years of struggle with intense interest, and as long as he remains unsuccessful, baffied by rivals or neglected by the world, we stand by him and want him to succeed; but the day after he is recognized by the world our sympathy begins to slacken. At our various offices we sell at New York prices, and give instructions, free of charge, to enable pursuant give instructions, free of charge, to enable pursuanter, bind and tuck, all couls, seem and contine, and warrant it for three years.

Among the list of "festivities," are a concert, cockfighting, target-shooting, Indian-shooting (announced as a new game), a bag race, and gymnastics, and various games for children. The company also is to be gladdened in the evening with an extensive display of fireworks, and an illumination of the gardens. All this is to be enjoyed for the moderate sam of fifty cents.

SPLENDID TROUT—INDIAN MODE OF CATOR-ING THUS.—In Shasta County, California, trout are found nearly two feet in length. The Washoe Indians catch them by spearing them. They are caught in great abundance, and what are not required for immediate use are smoked and packed for winter, in baskets. These latter are made by the squaws of a long, round grass found in the meadows, and some of them are so tightly plaited that they will hold water. INSATIABILITY OF HUMAN DESIRE. - GIVE
